COMMUNICATION ARTS MEDIA STUDIES

Overview of the Media Studies program:

The majors offered by the Department of Communication prepare students with industry-specific skills to be competitive when they enter the workforce. Communication skills—knowledge of communication technology, public speaking, and collaborative problem-solving—are highly in demand by employers.

The Media Studies Option is designed to examine the nature of the mass media through theoretical grounding and applied knowledge with a concentration in (1) the construction and delivery of media messages and (2) the effects of mediated messages and the structures and practices of the media industries on culture, society, politics, the economy, and individual attitudes and behavior. This approach prepares students for careers as trained media professionals as well as to be critical consumers of media messages. The study of message construction and analysis is offered in a variety of contexts including news gathering and reporting, public relations, video production, and advertising. In each context theoretical perspectives are combined with skills training related to print and electronic media. Career options in the field of Media Studies include public relations, marketing, broadcast news, corporate communications, and advertising.

What makes the Communications programs unique?

All of the Communication majors can be completed entirely online. Our department offers several HyFlex options to give students maximum flexibility when taking communication courses. Communication curriculum is taught by faculty who incorporate their cutting-edge research into class discussions. Communication majors also have the opportunity to pursue an industry-related internship to supplement their coursework.

What students like most about the Communication programs:

Students like that they can find program-relevant jobs in their area of study after completing their degrees. Communication coursework is contemporary, collaborative, and customized to the needs of the 21st century workforce.
