HI FROM
DR. STEVEN FUNK

Dear Colleagues,

I have truly enjoyed getting to know you all during the past few weeks. This weather always gives me a good dose of nostalgia for pumpkin spice anything and invigorates me. You see, as a runner, I know my most competitive times will be in October and November. Many of you may feel as though you're completing your own race of sorts during this time in the semester, and I hope you remember I'm here to help.

I have met with many first-year students for advising, and I have several meetings scheduled for next week. I marvel at how many of you enter your first year of university with college credits. I am also impressed by our athletes who contribute everything they've got to academics and physical conditioning. Others of you work nearly full-time or care for relatives while taking full-loads here. You all inspire me, and I can't wait to meet the rest of you.

While I remain nostalgic for pumpkin-spice soy lattes, my sentimentality is tempered by the sobering knowledge that November 20th marks transgender remembrance day, and already in 2018, the U.S. has buried more trans*+ murder victims (all of them women) than in 2017. As an advocate of social justice, I try each year to do something meaningful with my students to remember that we have seen much progress toward equity, but we have much distance yet to cover. It is my sincerest hope that as you all plan your Thanksgiving activities, you have safe spaces to go where you feel honored and validated as the people you see yourselves to be, not as some extension of your parents, or a façade of someone's expectations. If you know someone who may not have a safe space during the Thanksgiving (or winter) break, please let me know, so I can find a way to provide that student a peaceful respite during the break. "I cannot give my best in life if I am not being me." – Stevie Romer

Stay kind,
Dr. Funk

More to come!

The SAT was developed by Carl Brigham who, in the early twentieth century, felt that American education was declining due to racial mixing. The SAT was administered for the first time to high school students in 1926. Think this exam is unbiased?
